

Francis Cauffman hires Hancock as project manager for corporate projects

April 08, 2013 - Design / Build

Architecture firm Francis Cauffman has hired Jeremiah Hancock, Associate AIA, LEED AP, as a project manager for corporate interiors projects. Hancock will be responsible for managing several of Francis Cauffman's N.Y. projects for clients such as AOL and Spotify. Previously, Hancock was project manager at Mancini Duffy where he designed corporate interiors for prominent clients including A+E Television Networks, NBC Sports Group, and the Columbia University Medical Center. He has mentored high school students through the Architecture, Construction, and Engineering (ACE) Mentor Program, helping them to prepare for careers in design and construction. Hancock received his Bachelor of Architecture from Syracuse University.
