

Plaza Construction and Schiavone Construction celebrate topping out of Fulton Street; 180,000 s/f, $176 million upgrade to MTA's Subway Hub

February 13, 2012 - Design / Build

The long-awaited topping out of the Fulton Street Transit Center, the 180,000 s/f, $176 million upgrade to the MTA's subway hub in Lower Manhattan, took place with an onsite ceremony.

A team from Plaza Construction, named general contractor of the Center in a joint venture with Schiavone Construction, celebrated with MTA and city officials and guests.

Upon completion in 2014, the Fulton Transit Center will serve as a major transportation hub for eight subway lines.
