

Co-developers Taconic and Thor Equities top out 837 Washington; 55,000 s/f commercial and retail building designed by Morris Adjmi

September 09, 2013 - Design / Build

Co-developers Taconic Investment Partners and Thor Equities have topped out 837 Washington, the Morris Adjmi-designed commercial and retail building located at the epicenter of New York's Meatpacking District. The twisting structure rises from within an existing landmark building and will be punctuated by a floor-to-ceiling window wall wrapping the façade and greenery filling the negative spaces created by the building's unique twist. Located across from the High Line, Standard Hotel, and Whitney Museum, 837 Washington is destined to become one of the most iconic structures in all of the city. The developers spared no expense in making it the best-in-class building the neighborhood has to offer and the future location for internationally recognized business leaders.

The topping out of 837 Washington represents another important milestone for both Taconic and Thor in the Meatpacking District, a neighborhood both firms have been active in for several years. Previous Taconic developments in the neighborhood include The Caledonia (a 478-unit, mixed-use residential condo and rental with a 200-space parking lot) 401 West 14th St. (The Apple Building), 15 Little West 12th St., and 111 Eighth Ave. (Google's N.Y.C. headquarters). Thor's developments in the area include the Scoop Building at 875 Washington St., 446 West 14th St. and 412 West 14th St.

837 Washington's 55,000 s/f space has been envisioned as a flagship location for market-leading, global companies in the fashion and technology industries. Numerous possible divisions allow for up to 38,500 s/f of retail space or 40,000 s/f of office space.

The retail space is anchored by a corner presence with nearly 200 ft. of frontage on Washington and 13th Sts., just steps away from the bustling activity of the Standard Hotel and the High Line. The office portion is serviced by two elevators via a private lobby on Washington St., and has 12 ft. high ceilings with floor to ceiling divided light window walls affording abundant natural light and panoramic views. In addition, the building offers private terrace spaces of 500 s/f on the 2nd floor, 3,500 s/f on the 3rd floor, and 3,000 s/f on the roof, providing some of the Meatpacking District's best vantage points of the High Line, Hudson River, Midtown, and Lower Manhattan. The Whitney Museum of American Art, located to the immediate south, is set to debut in 2015. With first-year projected attendance totaling over one million visitors, the Whitney will further solidify the neighborhood's position as a global lifestyle and cultural destination.

Thor Equities is responsible for the retail leasing of 837 Washington; Newmark Grubb Knight Frank handles office leasing.

Located on one of the busiest corners in the Meatpacking District, 837 Washington is slated to become a premier hotspot for locals and visitors alike who frequent neighborhood fixtures including:

Diane Von Furstenberg, Theory, Alexander McQueen, La Perla, Jeffrey New York, Apple; and renowned restaurants like The Standard Grille, Catch, STK, Fig & Olive and Scarpetta, among others. The area is also home to some of the city's most recognized corporate office tenants including Google, MLB.com, Food Network, Nike, Deutsch, WebMD, Oxygen Network and EMI Music Publishers.
