

Sunrise Management & Consulting releases Multifamily Market Special Report

April 07, 2014 - Upstate New York

A Sunrise Multifamily Market Special Report was recently released. The report examines the rising number of apartment complexes being developed in the capital region, and addresses the question of whether there is an apartment building bubble.

"While it certainly seems like apartments are being developed everywhere in the Capital Region, a study of the underlying metrics of new unit construction and housing demands show that there is continued and steady growth in demand for multifamily housing," said Jesse Holland, president of Sunrise Management & Consulting.

The report looks at population growth projections, trends in building permits, housing construction, and historical vacancy rates, as well as shifting demands for housing in the capital region. The report finds that while the volume of new apartment units is growing faster than development of single family homes, the market will experience positive multifamily housing unit absorption over the next three to five years.
