

Value of a BOMI education for facilities and property management professionals

April 04, 2008 - Upstate New York

In today's ever-changing facilities and property management industry, the need for highly trained, skilled professionals has never been greater. Advances in building management technology, volatility in the commercial real estate market, and the increasing importance of public safety are a few reasons why companies and their clients are demanding an unprecedented level of expertise from their facilities and property management teams.

The Building Owners & Managers Institute International (BOMI) is a leader in professional designation and training for the facilities and property management industry, offering best-in-class educational solutions that deliver the skills that staff need to ensure an organization's growth and profitability.

Training from BOMI is an investment that consistently pays big dividends year after year. Their educational programs empower facilities and property management professionals and their organizations to perform at the highest levels, leading to greater job satisfaction; prestige and enhanced job security; increased value and earning potential; better staff retention; lower recruitment costs; improved communications, teamwork, and decision making skills; and a consistently high standard of service delivery.

For more information on BOMI training, go to www.bomi.org, or contact Steven Savoca, chairman of the education committee at (585) 334-4110.
