

Racanelli Construction chosen to rebuild Nicky's Clam Bar in Bay Shore; Designed by architect Dunn

December 09, 2014 - Design / Build

Racanelli Construction Company, Inc. has been awarded a construction project to rebuild Nicky's Clam Bar on the Great South Bay. The existing clam bar, known to all boaters in the area, will be knocked down and demolished and replaced by a new and updated clam bar and restaurant on the bay. Racanelli is serving as the construction manager on the project.

Principal and project executive Martin Racanelli, Jr., said, "The old building had been added on to for years making it outdated and visually less appealing. The new project, which is being designed by architect Michael Dunn with input from the owner's representative, Jim Finnerty, will result in Nicky's continuing to be one of the most popular spots on Long Island's south shore, accessible both by car and boat."

Among the building materials and components to be used in the project are: wood trusses, wood trim, a new Cambrio glass enclosure system, new fire sprinkler and fire alarm system, all new electrical and plumbing, a new kitchen and bar, windows and house style framing.

In addition to Martin Racanelli, Jr., Racanelli's team members on the project include project managers Steve Peragallo and Michelle Bremen.

Project completion is slated for spring 2015.
