Port Washington, NY Nassau County executive Edward Mangano said that the Nassau County Industrial Development Agency (IDA) has lured a New York City-based high-technology company to the North Hempstead hamlet with an economic development compact that will result in the move of 163 jobs and the creation of 255 additional high-paying jobs in Nassau County.

Agilant Solutions Inc., formerly known as ASI System Integration, Inc., plans to move its national headquarters from Manhattan to a 72,500 s/f warehouse and office building owned by Ivy Enterprises at 3 Seaview Blvd.

Agilant, which plans to spend $2.6 million on renovations, anticipates moving into the building by January 2018. The site initially will house 163 full-time-equivalent positions, including 163 from existing New York City and New Hyde Park offices. The company, which has 625 employees worldwide, plans to create another 255 permanent jobs in new location within five years of the move. The renovations include offices, a technology lab, call center, help desk and warehouse space.

The move will result in $217.3 million in total economic benefits to Nassau County and net tax revenues of $1.38 million to affected tax jurisdictions.

"This is a huge coup for Nassau County and my economic development team deserves kudos for not just helping to keep Agilant in New York State, but bringing what ultimately will be more than 400 high-paying jobs to Nassau County," County Executive Mangano said.

"This project allows a national leader in technology consulting to relocate and expand in Nassau County thereby benefiting the economy of the county by creating new jobs and private sector spending," said Joseph Kearney, executive director of the Nassau IDA.
