His teenage son Jack was diagnosed with T1D five years ago.

Whelan and others organized the first local fundraising games in 2016, which raised over $80,000 for T1D research. The JDRF Real Estate Games originated in the Washington, DC area 26 years ago, and this year expanded to Chicago with plans for further expansion in 2019. The three events raised over $1 million for T1D research in 2018.

John Johnson, Managing Director of Savills Studley and Chair of this year's Games said, "I'm very proud to be involved in the third JDRF Real Estate Games in New York City, this year as Co-Chair. Rarely does our industry have days out of the office to team build while raising funds for an important and life-changing organization like JDRF. Where else can the JLL or CBRE team play dodgeball or rock climb against SL Green or Vornado?"

David Kaufman, senior vice president of leasing at SL Green Realty Corp. and executive leadership chair of the games echoed the importance of the industry rallying to this cause. "Type 1 diabetes became part of my family's life a little over one year ago. Since that time, I have been searching for a way to support JDRF in finding a cure. The awareness and funds raised by this event are a meaningful contribution towards that goal. It has been heartwarming to see the amount of support my family, friends and co-workers have provided in connection with this great cause."

"Having been personally touched by type 1 diabetes, I can't overstate the impact of the research and advocacy work that JDRF does and the importance of our support," said David Rothenberg, President of Tishman Realty. "It was heartening to see the major players in our industry come together at an event that both builds camaraderie and raises much needed funding."

Maureen Fitzgerald, executive director of the JDRF New York City/Long Island Chapter said, "JDRF is extremely grateful for the generous support from the New York real estate community. This event is a great opportunity to get an incredibly energetic and philanthropic industry together, whether you have type one diabetes, know someone who does, or want to simply participate in an event that makes a huge impact on so many lives," she stated. "We are so fortunate to have the unwavering support of the numerous real estate industry partners who make it possible for JDRF to direct even more funding toward important T1D research for the 1.25 million people with this serious disease."
