

Bond New York sells out Powers Street Condominiums

October 10, 2008 - Owners Developers & Managers

According to Bond New York, Belvedere V's new condominium project, The Powers Street Condominiums, is 100 percent sold. The building, located at 37-39 Powers St. in Williamsburg, Brooklyn, is a fitting addition to the area, one of New York City's most popular neighborhoods.

Powers Street Condominiums are comprised of two six-story buildings, featuring 14 one and two-bedroom residences ranging in size from 580 to 1,252 s/f with outdoor garden spaces from 354 to 461 s/f. Â

"We are pleased with how quickly the residences in this project sold out," said Dave Kazemi, vice president of Bond New York. "This classically designed building is a great fit for the historic Williamsburg, while maintaining the trendy attitude of the new generation of buyers moving to the neighborhood."

Bond New York has a strong relationship with the Belvedere development firm and expects to announce numerous exclusive sales partnerships in the near future.

"The developer and Bond Property Marketing Group have created a dynamic partnership in the sales and marketing of this condominium building" said Fernanda Forman, managing director of Bond Property Marketing Group. "The successful collaboration resulted in prices exceeding expectations."
