New York, NY According to FirstService Residential, David Von Hollweg has been promoted to vice president in the NYC Condo/Co-op Division. In this role, Von Hollweg has executive oversight of a management portfolio comprising roughly 4,000 condos, co-ops, condops, and a team of dedicated property managers and assistants who specialize in the management of high-end residential buildings.

Von Hollweg entered the real estate sector in 2005 as a commercial property manager before transitioning to residential management.

Since then, he's played an instrumental role supporting developers and condominium owners during the opening phases of iconic, ultra-luxury buildings in New York City. Von Hollweg has also overseen more than $40 million in capital projects.

"David's collective management experience spans both residential and commercial properties, which affords him a level of insight not often observed in multifamily property managers," said FirstService Residential president of property management Michael Wolfe. "He continues to provide the highest levels of client and resident satisfaction, and his promotion acknowledges the value he brings to the clients we serve, as well as the property managers and associates in his division."

"My father told me at a young age that the key to growth and success is adapting to and embracing change," said Von Hollweg. "Over the past 20 years, the real estate industry has transformed and we, as property managers, have had to change with it. I continue to pass along my father's words of wisdom to my team every day as we embrace the ways our jobs continue to evolve."
