East Rutherford, NJ The Paradox Museum has finally been completed and is ready for visitors. Built out by JRM Construction, the museum features over 70 interactive exhibits for guests to immerse themselves in and enjoy. Located at The American Dream Mall, the museum is just over 11,000 s/f. The exhibits are made to stimulate both the mind and eyes, creating a unique museum experience.

From a creative standpoint, the project incorporates innovative design that appeals to the senses. For example, the museum was built to have one-way flow so that visitors can experience each paradox exhibit to the fullest. JRM was responsible for building out new exhibit rooms, a welcome area, reception, restrooms and a retail store.

The Paradox Museum welcomes guests with a unique storefront using custom metal & glass cubes, giving the new museum the modern twist that it needed. Additionally, each exhibit area was thoughtfully assigned a unique color and design scheme. Along with the high end finishes that were added to the project, JRM also installed new MEP and sprinkler systems, which are key to supporting the museum's infrastructure.

JRM was able to successfully complete the project through its collaboration with all of the project subcontractors, along with the architectural, engineering and structural teams.

Others involved with the project include:

Mancini Duffy, Architect

Ryan Soames Engineering, Engineer

Eipel Group Engineering, Structural
