September 26, 2023 - Front Section

Manhattan, NY Denham Wolf Real Estate Services has promoted Lauren Davis to director of occupier services and Jessica Stander to director of design.

Lauren Davis

Davis has been a member of the Denham Wolf team for nearly a decade, where she has worked with the firm's clients to provide a range of services, including brokerage and strategic planning. In her previous role as a senior transactions manager, she led The National Academy of Design through a successful search and negotiation process for a new space, which resulted in the oldest artist-run organization in the country signing a new lease in the Chelsea Art District. In her new position she will take on additional responsibilities managing the team of brokers and analysts and leading Denham Wolf's acquisition and tenant representation projects.

Since joining Denham Wolf in 2022 as a senior project manager, Stander, a registered architect with more than 20 years of design and capital project management experience, has guided nonprofits through every stage of the development process. This year, she is overseeing ongoing construction improvements and strategic planning for multiple clients, including Congregation Beth Elohim's 61,000 s/f building in Brooklyn and managing the construction of Bronx Community Health Network's new 12,000 s/f health and wellness ambulatory care center. As the director of design, Stander will serve as a firmwide expert on design and architecture projects and provide managerial support to the nine members of the project management team.

Jessica Stander

These newly defined roles will add managerial and administrative capacity as Denham Wolf continues to grow its base of clients, strengthen the work of the transaction services and project management teams, and allow principals Christopher Turner and Ronzard Innocent to provide more broad guidance across all the firm's clients.

"We are thrilled to promote Lauren and Jessica to these new roles as we continue to build and support a new generation of leadership at Denham Wolf," said Paul Wolf, managing principal and CEO. "Their dedication to our clients, strong leadership abilities, and continued excellence in their work helps Denham Wolf support the missions of our clients. We look forward to seeing all that they can accomplish in their new roles."

These promotions come as part of a broader expansion of the firm's organizational structure that began when Ron Innocent and Christopher Turner became principals and co-owners earlier this year. As directors, Davis and Stander will take on additional managerial capacity on their respective teams, which will allow Innocent and Turner to manage the firm's growing project management and transaction services practice groups more effectively. This transition will contribute to the firm's growth and ensure that Denham Wolf continues to provide the highest quality of real estate services to the nonprofit community.

Other promotions include Katie Hrobsky to senior transactions manager; Cameron Tuttle to senior associate; and Hector Pineda to senior project manager.
