Manhattan, NY Marty Burger launched Infinity Global Real Estate Partners (Infinity Global), a real estate company focused on development, acquisitions, financing and fund management across the United States. Established in partnership with Andrew Farkas' Island Capital Group, Infinity Global will pursue developments including conversions from office to residential uses and larger mixed-use development projects, opportunities involving under-capitalized operating properties and will build a debt platform to fund both operating properties and new developments through construction loans.

"I am excited to launch Infinity Global, particularly at this time in the real estate cycle," said Marty Burger, CEO of Infinity Global. "From development of world-class projects, to acquiring great operating assets and building platforms for debt and other real estate investment strategies, there are outstanding opportunities for the firm across the industry. Our partnership with Andrew Farkas and Island Capital will further strengthen our ability to execute and we're already putting deals in motion."

Prior to launching Infinity Global, Burger was the chief executive officer of Silverstein Properties, where he led the company's day-to-day operations from 2010 through 2023, and focused on its acquisition, development, financing and fund management efforts in the United States and abroad. Throughout his career, Burger has been at the forefront of some of the world's most renowned projects, contentious redevelopments, and groundbreaking restorations including the World Trade Center, the Four Seasons Walt Disney World in Orlando, the Four Seasons Downtown New York Hotel and Residences, and One West End.

Before joining Silverstein, Burger was president and chief executive officer of Artisan Real Estate Ventures, a company he founded in 2006. A seasoned industry executive, Burger also held senior roles at The Related Companies, L.P, where he was employed for 15 years and was involved in noteworthy developments such as the Time Warner Center in New York City, CityPlace in West Palm Beach, and the World Market Center in Las Vegas. Earlier in his career, Burger worked for The Blackstone Group and Goldman Sachs, focusing on acquisitions and real estate opportunity funds.

As a leading voice within the industry, Burger serves in multiple capacities on numerous boards including as a trustee and a governor of the Urban Land Institute, and on advisory real estate boards at The Wharton School, Cornell University, NYU, and the Fisher Center at the Haas School at Berkeley. Burger was also a member of New York City Mayor Eric Adams' Transition Team, is a trustee of the Citizens Budget Commission, a board member of the Partnership for New York City, a Real Estate Board of New York Governor, and is on the Real Estate Life Science Advisory Board for New York.
