

Bri-Tech introduces next generation of Web Connect Monitoring System

November 06, 2009 - Owners Developers & Managers

Bri-Tech, Inc., a leading designer and integrator of high-end home and commercial automation systems including security, fire alarm, intrusion, access control, data networking, voice communications, electrical, and IP video surveillance, introduced the next generation of its Web Connect Monitoring System, a web-based remote monitoring tool for owners of businesses and high-end homes. Improved features include the ability to view various locations from one screen, increased safety features, and an updated graphical interface.

"We invested heavily in R&D to improve upon our existing monitoring system and make it as easy as possible for business and high-end home owners to keep control over their assets," said Brian McAuliff, Bri-Tech's CEO. Owners can have peace of mind knowing that the system will automatically alert Bri-Tech's technicians with a problem before the client recognizes there is an issue.

Web Connect is a website that provides owners the flexibility of monitoring and controlling their settings - from any location - with a simple mouse click. Owners can now gain greater control over their offices with the ability to monitor and control their office temperature, generators, ups system, emergency power, ventilation, security systems, lighting and more, all from one remote screen. Owners can now quickly glance at the monitoring screen and view red and green blocks to determine if all systems are working correctly. The new screen is as easy to use as the touch screen that Bri-Tech installs in homes and office buildings.

E-mail notifications are sent out from an outside network alerting owners on the status of their temperature control, ventilation, access control, fire detection, security/alarm systems, video monitoring, lighting, networking, and communication systems for all locations.
